Abstract:

Network design optimization problems have diverse applications in transportation and telecommunication systems. However, a notable fraction of these issues turn NP-hard in the context of metric graphs. Unfortunately, the attainment of reasonably accurate solutions within polynomial time has posed considerable challenges for multiple network design optimization problems. In this talk, we will present various versions of these problems and deliberate on their approximability.